GREENER FUTURE

The International Olympic Committee (IOC) presented six organisations with the Sport and Environment Award for their outstanding contributions in the field of sustainable sport and the environment. The awards were presented by IOC chief Dr Jacques Rogge on Saturday, the opening day of the Ninth World Conference on Sport and the Environment, in Doha. The award is presented every two years to members of the Olympic Movement (individuals, groups or organisations) who are nominated by various National Olympic Committees, international federations and continental associations. This year, 43 nominations were submitted, with one winner selected for each of the five continents. The 2011 winners are...
